Chapter One

"How You Can Fire Your Boss FOREVER"

This article is designed to improve your perception of the business world. An educated perception is the first requirement of financial success.

We endeavor to prepare our customers and teach them how to prosper and flourish in the world as it now operates in a democratic society. If you really intend to win a game then you need to know the rules.

Many people are trapped by their belief in the media generated by the politicians which seeks to keep citizens quiet and obedient.

This propaganda attempts, with great success, to instill the idea that if you are a good company employee and pay your taxes then the state will look after you from the cradle to the grave.

It will protect you from criminals, educate your children, support you when you are unemployed and maintain your standard of living when you retire from paid labor.

Sadly, this is not true!

Each country maintains criminals and controls common people through public schools as truly educated citizens are more difficult to control.

It also depresses welfare payments to a level where a person is desperate to work for the minimum wage and the pension system is undermined and controlled so that those dependent on handouts have no voice, those defrauded of their lifelong contributions have no redress and those presently paying into retirement funds are led to expect better treatment when they retire.

There is only one way to be sure of access to the better things in life, not to mention health.

You must be able to afford them. This means being relatively wealthy and able to buy the necessities and luxuries of life which are so freely available to those with the financial wherewithal. So how do you become wealthy?

If you wish to prosper and grow rich, the first thing you need to know about the commercial world is that you cannot become wealthy by working for someone else.

You must develop the attitude that you need to fire your boss. You have to be number one and in control of your destiny.

Every business attempts to pay its workers the minimum that it can. This means the least pay and benefits which the business can offer to its staff and continue to own the labor of the workers and managers necessary for it to function at an optimum level.

Lower wages means more profits to the owners of the business. Big business uses government to hold down wages. Wages allow workers to buy bread and sometimes do some things they like.

Corporations of similar business entities meet together once a year to discuss and agree on a standardized wage rate so that people do not cross the fence for a newer job based on merely on a pay raise. They do this because it costs money to recruit and train new workers. It is more cost effective for them to agree to have the same base rate to eliminate unfair competition for employees.

There are times and situations when an employer must pay higher wages to compete for scarce labor or skilled staff but this doesn't happen for long because the Western World is set up in such a way that there is almost always a pool of unemployed workers eager to do unskilled work for the minimum wage allowable by the law. If there is a shortage of laborers then they import refugees who will be happy to work for such low wages in a new country where they are promised Freedom.

I always hear that there was a shortage of transport drivers. The real hard core truth is that there is an over abundance of driver's. That is why transport drivers have to work long hours for so little pay. They quit and some other welfare worker eager for a job will fill the seat as fast as the company can fill it. They dangle the carrot of just enough miles and pay to force them to keep going all at a cost of their families and their health. Can't afford to quit, but struggling to survive.

This minimum wage is set as a tool to generate support for the government while still only guaranteeing an unskilled worker barely enough pay to survive.

Presently, both husband and wife have to work to provide for the necessities of life, and many of them just scrape by, and usually at the expense of their education, physical or mental health and dental needs.

Let's take a look at a model taken from a democratic Society.

A large hog farm was setup and financed by the government to stimulate fiscal growth in the area. The company offered minimum wage but working conditions were so bad they could not keep staff and they were unwilling to pay higher wages.

So they imported refugees from Mexico who were used to living and working in poor conditions and they were seeking promised freedom in the land of opportunity.

They got what they wanted but soon realized that the cost of living and inflation was also eating up their wages. Soon they too started seeking higher paying jobs and the hog farm was back where it started.

And so the cycle of hiring, quitting, and firing continues to this day. When you're in the wage pool that is what you can expect. Insecurity!

How many people do you know who have become independently wealthy by working for someone else?

The only capital which most working people have is tied up in their houses - and this is still a government tactic to control them.

You will observe that a family has to purchase their home usually by a mortgage.

Home ownership has been encouraged so that people have financial security. Once they have this security it gives them leverage to borrow from the banks for other items such as cars which they need to get to work.

The bank rates are set by the government and the banks profit from all this trading, and it stimulates the economy. In the event of further government control they can take your home from you. That is why you pay taxes each year on your home. If you really owned your home, you would pay tax only at the time of the purchase.

The actual astronomical price of a person's house is of no value to them because if they sell it they still have to buy a new home to live in or pay high rental prices calculated on the price of a similar property.

House prices are maintained at the highest level by tycoons and realtors greedy for fat commissions.

Young people are rarely able to build a new home through high land prices and stringent building codes pushing the prices of available new homes through the roof.

In accordance with inflation it costs little more to build a house now than it did 25 years ago yet look how prices have risen around the world!

The major reason is availability and a sellers market. Only about 4% of land in most countries is developed yet the people are told that building is restricted to preserve the countryside as farmland or national parks.

Is a tiny part of this countryside more valuable as "set aside" farmland, unused and subsidized by the local government, than it is as homes for our people?

Why do governments strategically force people to live in the cities? It is all about control and stimulating the economy through taxation.

History Lesson

Prior to the 1750s the peasants of England used to be able to survive by keeping some livestock on the common land and working an "allotment" for a vegetable garden. They would supplement this self-sufficiency by working for the local landowner at harvest time but this paid labor was only the icing on their cake and they could survive without his pay if they had a mind to.

This independence put the common people in a strong bargaining position with regard to wages and when grain prices fell owing to cheap imports from the USA they refused to work for the reduced wages offered by the landowners.

This made farming less profitable or impossible for the landowners so, as the landowners controlled the government, they decided to bring in a series of laws called the "Enclosure Acts" and the Anti-Combination Laws".

The Enclosure Acts made over to the major landowners all the common land for them to farm. The effect of this, besides building up the acreage under the major landowners' control, was that it forced the ordinary people to work for the big landowners or starve because they could no longer support themselves without the use of common land. The Anti-Combination Laws effectively forbade people from forming trade unions and banding together to fight injustice and oppression in farm or factory.

Another result of these punitive laws was huge numbers of people "Transported" to Australia and elsewhere for life as slave labor to be used on the colonial farms.

Many people do not realize that transported convicts were not just set free at the other end but required to work, effectively as slaves, for periods of seven years and more. The crimes for which people were transported included stealing a rabbit in the country and stealing a crust of bread in the city. Was this justice or slavery?

The reason the author is explaining these matters is to cut through the propaganda which the ordinary people are fed in Western Society. Principles do not change. The rulers still don't care for their workers - they only pretend they do for public relations purposes.

The real reason for the end of slavery is that it costs money to buy a slave and then more to feed him when there is no work to do. An hourly paid worker can be dismissed and left to starve without a loss of invested capital.

What does this mean to you? It means you are still subtly oppressed by your government on behalf of the hidden rulers of your society. You need to understand the reality of your situation to break free of it.

In a civilized country you cannot opt out. You must be a Master or a Slave.

And to be a Master the only thing you need is money. There is only one way you will ever make real money; enough to live as you please without working; enough never to have to bow to your boss again.

The only way to escape this slavery is to be the Boss and own your own business.

It doesn't matter if it is an office cleaning business, a mini market or a large corporation, the only way to fully benefit from your own labor, efforts or enterprise is to reap the profits of your efforts.

To do that you must have something to produce or re-sell. You need your own business.

In my eBook 'Diversify Our Income' located on http://reputableworkathome.com/Diversify_Our_Income.html you will learn how to effectively and efficiently do just that.

Chapter Two

How You Can Become Wealthy Through Business

Business is the exchange of goods or services for payment between two willing parties - The Business and the Customer.

The goal of all business is to receive a greater price for their goods or services than the original cost whether they created the product or is merely reselling something purchased.

The customer is seeking the satisfaction of their wants or needs and seeks the convenience of the supplier at that time, place and price.

Both should get what they want: The business becomes richer through profit on the exchange of goods and the customer has his or her wants or needs satisfied.

An example of a supplier of goods is a shoe store. The owner may purchase shoes from a manufacturer to resell at a profit, or the owner may choose to manufacture them from raw materials.

An example of a service supplier is a Janitor. This service is to clean offices and is therefore responsible for every stage of the process from finding the client to vacuuming the floors and collecting the fees.

Doing More Business:

There is a limit to how many (shoes) a manufacturer can make or buildings a Janitor can clean. This sets a natural limit upon the earnings of the individual in every business and profession as profits are always a percentage of sales.

How many hours can a person work in any one week?

The conventional way to increase one's earnings has always been to employ other people to do more of the same kind of work or even split the work down into simple segments for efficiency.

This is called duplication. Duplicate yourself and grow your business for more profits.

A Cobbler might set up a factory with some people cutting leather, some dying, some stitching etc. A janitor might employ people to clean his client's offices. The company might also employ a salesman to find new clients.

These employees become the employees -- wage slaves. Ironically most people look to others for employment and they voluntarily place themselves into the wage/slave class of people.

Sure there may very well be social and economic factors which drive people into desperation to earn a living, but most people are also modeled by their parents and other adults that hard work is the only way.

Keep reading for a new perspective.

Theoretically, from making five pairs of shoes per week with their own hands the cobbler could expand through hired labor to making an almost infinite number of shoes in the same week. The profit per pair of shoes would only be a little less than through their own production because they are paying wages to have them assembled, but they would also be enjoying discounts through buying large amounts of leather cheaply.

The only practical limit to the amount of money they could make would be set by the number of shoes which could be sold at a profit and this in turn would be dictated by competition from other shoe salesmen and a limited number of shoe buyers. As with all businesses, the limit to profit is set by achievable sales volume at a price exceeding gross expenses.

What Business Should You Choose?

We are assuming here that you seek to make a great deal of money quickly and have little capital or specialized knowledge to begin with. Making shoes is a skilled job. Indeed, most manufacturing processes require a great deal of skill or knowledge and many require a large amount of capital to set up the production facility.

Imagine producing any item you see before your eyes from scratch?

A restaurant requires a good chef and a few good servers. Traditionally restaurants are also an expensive business to operate. In order to succeed it also requires an experienced manager or owner. To some extent these requirements limit the competition in these fields of business but they also limit the speed at which these businesses can expand.

One other factor which necessitates the need to carefully choose your line of business is that 85% of businesses fail within the first three to five years. The question we need to ask is: "why?"

The answer is: failure to do proper research, market conditions, and location, rushing ahead too fast, under funded projects, unrealized overhead costs, no long term goals, and even bad luck. There are a lot more reasons but these are a few to consider.

The lesson that can be learned is this: you must have an inexpensive product, low overhead, have long term goals, keep going even when things look bad.

There are starters, stoppers and stickers. Stickers keep going no matter what and they make the huge profits. Most people quit too soon through discouragement. Keep your chin up; the money is on the other side of the mountain.

The type of product you can supply is limited by your knowledge, skill and capital. It is also the case that there are no prizes for doing things the hard way, so most businesses choose the simplest way which makes sufficient profit for your requirements, and which meets the following criteria:

Simple product(s):

Choose a product(s) which is simple and cheap to produce as this means a rapid or sudden increase in orders can be fulfilled on time and therefore you can expand cheaply and quickly.

Simplicity also means you can control the manufacturing procedure more closely and change sub-contractors if they do not give satisfaction. Cheap means you can mass market without the need for a sales force.

The business you choose should be "Sales led" which means that rather than supplying a complex product or service to a customer base limited by your time - like an accountant - you should be working on your marketing to increase the amount of product sold.

You should sell to Private People: Businesses buy on facts and figures; therefore the margins are relatively small and the sales difficult.

Private people buy on impulse or emotion and therefore the margins can be larger until the market is saturated. With the right product the sale can be very easy and the volume very high.

Go for a product with wide appeal: There are obviously a lot more private people than businesses so there are more prospects to sell to.

Besides selling to the end user the product should have as wide an appeal as possible. Almost everyone eats white bread. There are relatively few left handed clarinet players.

No Competition:

The dream of every business is a total absence of competition. No competition means you can charge what the buyer will stand and therefore keep your profit margin high.

Your only variable to establish is what price generates the most profit. Sometimes a lower price will generate more profit through high volume than a higher price with lower volume.

There are only certain products where you can guarantee no competition. These include inventions protected by patent and text, music and film products protected by copyright. This last concept is important so remember it well.

Summary

The secret of amassing great wealth quickly through business is to find a product or service with mass appeal yet no competition and which requires little skill to supply.

If you can then market this product or service efficiently you will become wealthy. This places almost all the emphasis on marketing rather than service or product. And the marketing goal in this case is to reach potential customers rather than out-sell the competition on slender margins. In any event, marketing is a skill which can be easily bought or learned.

What can you make in volume which will have no competition? The answer is text on paper or on computer disk, or an e-book. Copyright will prevent anyone else in the world from copying your product so that you can guarantee no competition.

A few Photocopies, CD's or DVD's cost little in comparison to the valuable information on them and a customer expects to pay at least $30 and much more. Yet the actual product costs a tiny fraction of its perceived value to produce. Printing is very cheap yet for a useful or interesting instruction manual or book people will happily pay very well.

Information based products have the highest profit margin of any product bar none and yet can be produced with just a computer and/or home printer or in huge volume cheaply by sub-contractors. They can also be transmitted over the Internet so cheaply to millions of clients as to be almost free to the supplier.

When you own the copyright to an information-based product you can make as many copies as you wish for very little outlay and maintain a huge margin as no one can copy your product. Your profit margin is only limited by what people consider your product is worth.

Copyright is obtained by the act of creating a music, video or text product. Copyright can be bought, loaned and sold. Obviously, not everyone has the talent to write good music or make interesting movies and such items generally cost a fortune to produce. Consequently the copyright is expensive or impossible to purchase.

Anyone, however, can obtain the copyright to a valuable book, manual or report consisting of text conveying information.

Conclusion

The solution to the gaining wealth is to obtain the copyright to a text-based information product or write your own eBook that has a high perceived value to a great many ordinary people and then to market it efficiently in great volume over the Internet. You will discover how to do this shortly.

Chapter Three

How to Advertise and Get Paying Customers Eager to Buy From You

Advertising as a whole is a lot bigger subject than it might at first appear. It is too complex a subject to cover in depth here but we will endeavor to cover the most important elements.

To be successful in business you must understand these principles thoroughly because getting advertising right or wrong will make or break any and every business.

For our purpose and consideration advertising may be split into differing aims or intent and differing media. We will cover these so far as space allows: Marketing professionals will excuse the brevity.

The Aim of Advertising

We will look at "Aim" first: The aim of advertising is not always to make a sale directly – advertising can actually be motivated by any of three aims. These aims are only subtly different and also overlap.

Product Awareness

The first aim is to build product awareness and possibly give the consumer confidence in the advertiser; “They must be big/legitimate because they are on TV.” When a person is considering an important or expensive purchase they will not normally go for the first product they see.

Seeking a car or a washing machine the consumer will normally consider the specifications and prices of a number of alternatives. When a car manufacturer places an advertisement on the TV or in a national newspaper for a motor car they do not expect people to go out and buy one the same day.

What they hope for is that the prospective purchaser will add their product to the list of possible motor cars under consideration. Then, when they are ready, they will visit a show room and take a test drive or whatever.

Many high value products are marketed primarily in this way. Keeping a brand name in the public eye is called "Branding" and costs a lot of money to sponsor races, meetings, football matches etc. Think cosmetics and cars.

Of course, when the prospect visits a showroom, the salesman seeks to make a sale by appealing to emotion.

Prospect Lists

The second "aim" is to generate an enquiry in the future or build a prospect list. A commercial radio station can run an advertisement for a local DIY store until the name and a "jingle" sinks into the listeners' memory.

When they need something for DIY they will think of the store first – hopefully. So here the idea is to let the prospect know there is a supplier available and they can come and make the purchase when they are ready.

The difference from the above is that there will not, hopefully, be a considered selection between different DIY stores. Again, as with cars, the actual selling is done at the retail site.

This technique also works with immediacy on an impulse-buy product such as fashion clothing. The prospect may not have been looking for a pair of jeans but seeing the advertisement might be persuaded that they need the product.

Alternatively, the product can be advertised by targeted mail-shot or newspaper advertisement and then, rather than asking for the order, the prospect can be asked to request further details.

This technique has the added advantage that the marketer builds a list of interested prospects and can re-mail them cheaply to raise his conversion rate. They can also be offered alternative, similar products. This technique is sometimes called "Two-Step Marketing."

Immediate Sale

The third intention is Direct Marketing where the advertisement asks for the order. This technique is effective for relatively low value products and allows for a huge volume of orders without expensive administrative procedures or retail outlets. It works well in several differing media according to the potential market the supplier is aiming for.

With a cheap mass-market product TV, radio, newspaper or direct mail can sell the product and ask for the order to be mailed or telephoned in and payment taken by credit card such as music CDs. This is called "Off the Page" advertising because the product is sold directly from a "page" advertisement.

Alternatively, and more recently, the prospect can be guided to an Internet brochure and money taken by Credit Card or Cheque.

Media Selection

The correct and most useful way to assess all forms of advertising media is in terms of cost per product sold. It doesn't matter if the ad is "expensive" so long as the sales cover the cost of the advertisement, administration and product – and, of course, leave a profit.

Differing types of advertising have vastly differing features, all of which must be taken into consideration when marketing a product:

1. TV advertising is very expensive but it reaches huge numbers of people.
2. National newspapers are fairly cheap but poorly targeted.
3. Leaflets and posters are cheap but reach low numbers demographically.
4. Direct Mail can well targeted but expensive.

The first step towards assessing the sales potential of a form of advertising is to consider the viewing figures. These are supplied by all printed media and most TV companies.

With a leaflet-drop or mail-shot you know the numbers yourself. National newspapers are not a great deal more expensive to advertise in than "locals" but they reach a far higher audience. This is because local newspapers jack up their prices because they can rely on their monopoly to advertise local businesses to their local market.

Bear in mind two things:

- The viewing figures that count are the numbers of viewers who are in the market for your product. If you advertise in Field & Stream to sell tackle then most viewers are in the market – less so if you advertise in the same magazine for a business opportunity.
- As a general rule, the larger the circulation the cheaper the advertising per reader/viewer.

With all advertising the rule is to TEST, TEST and TEST again.

Test the media – TV, Newspaper, door to door delivery, magazine insert or whatever against other media using similar copy and grading by cost per sale. Test the advertisement or mailing piece against other advertisements. Test the dates of delivery.

*Selling is persuading a person to buy a product "on the spot" If they neither want your product or are not ready to buy from you then they may get upset.

Successful marketing targets an audience that is ready and eager to buy your products.

If you would like to find out how you may apply all this to internet advertising and marketing we recommend getting your copy of 'Diversify Our Income' at http://reputableworkathome.com/Diversify_Our_Income.html

Chapter Four

Growing Your Money Tree

Starting your own online business is only the first step toward launching a successful career. You planted a seed. But now you need the right conditions to make it grow. Advertising will make it grow. The right kind of advertising will make it grow faster.

Getting people to enroll in your business means getting them to see the some form of advertisement which caused you to join our organization or any of the other companies represented in our plan.

It will be easier to get people to one site than to several at once. So you must decide now how you will reach the people you want.

Once you have caused people to look at your advertisement they will check out your site and everything else follows automatically from there including the money flowing into your own bank account.

If you have never done any marketing or advertising before then even attracting just a few people may seem like a "big deal." Actually it isn't.

You can do this easily! We are going to show you exactly how you can bring in New Customers without investing any more money – to speak of. You just have to invest a little time on your emails or the Internet.

Alternatively, if you are happy to invest a few Dollars to earn a fortune you can use paid advertising and we explain how to do this too.

You want to make this business as easy as possible for yourself don't you? And it would be nice if doing the ads made money rather than cost money – wouldn't it?

Below we show you how to get started and we will show you how to become an Internet Marketing Expert:

Advertising on the Web

Email Signatures

There is a facility in most email software called "Signature".

Once you enter the information it automatically adds a short text of your choice to the bottom of every email you send.

Create a small text advertisement for "business" as your "Signature" with a link to your web site. Make it short.

To set up your "Signature" just open your email account, click on Tools, then find Options or Signature. Type in the text and it is done.

To create a Web Link as part of your "Signature" just type in your website address and it will go blue like this link www.reputableworkathome.com/ so people know they just have to click there to be transported to your Page.

People do follow these links. If you only use Signatures on your day to day emails you will soon have a number of recruits - and remember there is no time limit.

Chat & Newsgroups

There are tens of thousands of Internet chat and news groups whose members communicate about issues of interest to themselves. Each group tends to be about a particular subject. Yahoo, Squidoo, and Digg are just a few examples. You may want to start there.

If you are not familiar with this idea already you can find them through your browser or a search engine. You will be amazed at the number of newsgroups there are which attract members.

Choose groups which are related to the concept of making money so as to not offend the members.

Alternatively, any groups you contribute to within the main topic would be happy for members to see your email signature.

Some groups have large readerships and this free form of advertising can work extremely well if you put the effort in -- particularly contributing to non money related groups.

Find a group which discusses something you know about or have an interest in and share your wisdom with them.

Targeted Email

Targeted Email has started to work efficiently as the Internet develops. Prices are coming down and viewers are starting to buy. Search on Yahoo or Google for “mailing lists” or similar and you will have a huge choice. Test a few at a time and take it slowly.

Please remember that you must only email to reputable opt-in lists as to mail unsolicited to the general public is not acceptable behavior on the Internet. This is Spamming and may result in having your IP address shut down.

Advertisements in Online Publications

There are a number of electronic publications which accept advertising. The idea is that they have a large number of people who have either paid to receive or agreed to receive the publication daily, weekly, monthly or whatever because the subject matter is something which appeals to them.

Look up a magazine which covers a subject which, in your opinion, might attract the sort of people you are looking for - potential customers.

Advertising in these magazines is generally cheaper per reader than hardcopy advertising and whilst you cannot be sure of results until you test, at least you know that all the recipients of your advertising message have access to the Internet.

Search Engines

Register your web site with all the popular search engines. Using Pay per Click and bidding on keywords are effective ways to get the message out there.

You can use almost any media to get people to look at your website. Once they have found your site the material will present itself.

Spam is defined as the sending of Unsolicited Commercial Email. This means sending mass emails to people who have not joined opt-in-lists or Safe-lists.

Opt-in-lists and Safe-lists are fine providing they are from a reputable supplier.

Spam does not work but it does clog up the Internet system, irritate a great many people and cause us a lot of unnecessary administration.

Blogging

The neat thing about blogging is that you do not have to know how to setup a website or anything like that. You order your niche website all setup with Wordpress.

Once you can login you can change the template if you desire. You may also add new features by simply clicking a few buttons.

Then everyday you add new content by creating a new Post or new Page. As you add more and more content people will begin to stream to your site and more revenue is created from the advertising links you have placed on your blog.

Advertising off the Web

Car Bumper Stickers

You can create a bumper sticker with your website address on it. It is surprising how much attention stickers on car bumpers, in car windows and pasted onto signposts at road junctions can attract.

You could also get some white vinyl lettering and put your website or business name on the rear window of your car. For example: www.reputableworkathome.com/ works quite well.

You want to avoid doing this on older vehicle because the vehicle will give the impression of not making any money!

Posters

You can create an advertising card or poster with your website address on it. Place this on a notice board at work or in an office window. It is cheap to do and it will bring in some visitors to your site.

Newspaper/Magazine Advertisements

Create an advertisement and place it in a suitable section of either a local newspaper or a magazine. You may have to use the "Personal" section in some newspapers. Specialty magazines can work very well.

Direct Snail Mail

The principle involved in Direct Mail is to send an offer to a relatively large number of people who may be more interested than the average in the offer you are making. Direct Mail allows you to get your message across to a great number of interested potential customers quickly and without personal contact.

Target audiences may be acquired by renting a Mailing List. In this case a list of persons interested in starting their own business. You are primarily looking for people who want to earn an income over the internet.

Mailing list providers advertise in countless magazines and periodicals in the US and elsewhere. Dozens of list brokers may also be found using word searches on the Internet.

Telephone Recording

You can take out a small ad in a paper and have them phone a local or toll free number with a recorded message giving them the basics of your business and reminding them of the website address to find out more.

Ideally, any business should expect to spend 20-35% on advertising.

Use any form of advertising that seems applicable to you. Try one form this time, another form of advertising another time. See which one brings the most results.

Alternatively, you could design a shorter advertisement of your own. Remember, you are not asking them for money, you are asking them to visit a web site.

Never try to sell people something. They will get their guard up. Invite them with excitement to look at your page and let the website do the selling.

In your advertisements use a few words to explain your business, list your web site and e-mail address so they can contact you and invite them to take a look at this wonderful marketing strategy where people all around the world can make money easily.

The big idea is to "peak" the readers interest and get as many people as possible to visit your Web Page and be able to Enroll straight from the advertisement.

Find yourself a printer or copier to reproduce your ads and distribute them the most effective way you can think of.

Continue using various methods and settle on a few that you achieved the best results from.

You can read more about how to run your own internet business on www.reputableworkathome.com/

May your pathways be pleasant and your pockets full of cash!
